

office

MadeMe x Aya Brown's Latest Drop

June 25, 2019

MadeMe launched a collaboration with Brooklyn-based artist Aya Brown in the midst of Pride month. Celebrating sexuality in her artwork, Brown composed three original illustrations to be printed on the brand's latest drop. The imagery in the collab ranges from strap-on dildos and bare breasts to exercising, bringing added meaning to the term graphic tees.

"It's important for me to document and write my own history, my black queer history," says Brown. "Because what does our space even look like? Our lesbian space? Our black lesbian space? The world is so not ready, but we're fucking coming!"

Text by Vivian Cheng

Founded by Erin Magee in 2007, MadeMe is a New York-based brand made “for girls, by girls,” as stated in the company’s bio. Prior to launching her own label, Magee served as the Director of Development and Production at Supreme. With the newest collab, MadeMe continues their journey to empower women by representing diverse perspectives and honoring intimacy, strength and community in the realm of streetwear.

